The Universal Lesson. Strickland Gillilan, in Leslie's.

SOME one knows something that I don't know.—This is life's lesson wherever I go.

My train pours on through the night's black sleeve:
I feel her joggle and veer and give.
Yet she clings to the rails, by law divine.
Applied by cannier crafts than mine.
And she sings me to sleep with her rhythmic flow,
Some one—knows something that you—don't know."

I see in a station a yokel rode With rowling-piece rust-crusted, old and crude— Yet, strewing the floor 'round his muddled feet Are trophies of game for a monarch meet.
Again the lesson that goes to show Some one knows something that I don't know.

I raise my gaze to the stars of night, leagues, their light.
Lending, through legions of Amazed I murmur: "And yet I see The meagerest marge of immensity!" So I whisper humbly, with head bowed low, "Some one knows something that I don't know."

This is my lesson wherever I go—
"Some one knows something that I don't know."
